

Money Mastery

Money Mastery isn't finance training for young people. It is training that equips young people's workers to motivate young people to think about their income, wealth and their personal goals. It is a free, high energy, one day money coaching seminar, offered through the National Youth Agency's Financial Literacy Programme.

More than a thousand young people's workers have gone through the programme so far. It will continue to run at least until Spring 2011.

A second course, The Benefits Trap, addresses the need to go beyond an entitlement approach to benefits and provide young people's workers with techniques to open up exploration of aspirations and improved motivation.

Benefits

- Helps young people's workers to create new options and choices, helping young people to overcome the negative beliefs, patterns and behaviours that keep them stuck.
- Raises aspiration in youth workers both of themselves and of the young people they work with.
- Assists youth work practitioners to meet the 'achieving economic wellbeing' Every Child Matters outcome.
- Bespoke programmes for local authorities on request.

"This is a really great course. Well presented, thought provoking and challenging."
